Special Presentation

An interesting and informative presentation was given by Captain Edward P. Moore, about "Helicopter Flying in Combat". Captain Moore authored a book on experiences of Marine Helicopters pilots in the Vietnam War, titled "Out of Da Nang". He also had two scale models of UH-34D helicopters like the ones he actually flew in Vietnam. E.P. Moore enlisted in the Marines and survived the 12 weeks basic training. Following basic, he was selected for flight training. The Marines begin by training all flyers in fixed wing planes. After successfully qualifying, he transitioned to rotary wing aircraft. Again qualifying, his first duty station was MCAF Santa Ana at Tustin Air Base. Captain Moore spent the next year flying with the Marines refining his skills as a helicopter pilot. This included making landings in the Santa Ana Mountains that later he found was excellent training for flying in Vietnam. When his helicopter unit, HMM 364, "The Purple Foxes," deployed to Indo-

China as Vietnam was commonly called in 1964, it consisted of a complement of twenty-four aircraft, 43 officers and one hundred forty six enlisted men. The HMM 364 unit was based in DaNang, which is in the northern part of South Vietnam and is a natural seaport much like San Francisco. However, the airfield needed to be improved. The runway was constructed of PSP (pierced steel plank), and the control tower was small. The Marines took over the old French barracks but there was an Officers Club.

The squadron flew missions in support of the Army of the Republic of Vietnam (ARVN), referred to as "Operation Shufly", amassing in excess of 9,000 hours and transporting over 900,000 pounds of supplies during the period February to June 1964. The HMM 364 has an excellent web site; www.hmm-354.org. 10% of the proceeds from the sale of the book, "Out of DaNang" will go to the Wounded Warrior Program.

During the question and answer period, Captain Moore said the UH-34 had a glide angle during autorotation "like a rock". Chairman Jack Hammett, who is also dual-qualified on fixed wing and rotary wing aircraft, said, "The difference between flying fixed wing and rotary wing aircraft is that fixed wing aircraft want to fly and rotary wing aircraft want to crash."
